

FUTURE VISION

NO LIMITS

EducationMatters believes that anything is possible for public education students when the community is committed to ensuring that all children and youth succeed at school.

A look at our past year is testament to that. We saw generous Calgarians stand up for K-12 students as evidenced by our growing constituent base and expanding grants programs. The future looks bright for literacy, leadership, life transitions and healthy learners. Over the next few years, as we continue to grow our grants to schools and increase the number of student awards, we will strive to build even stronger community connections with the aim of granting out $1 million annually by 2015.

We are excited to ride the wave of social transformation and renewed interest in civic engagement. Technology, such as social media and e-philanthropy, are opening up a world of connections and challenging us to rethink the way we work. Our reach into the community is expanding through new coalitions and collaborations. Over the next few years, we will explore new frontiers and seek ways to build even greater support for students. There are no limits on student success when public education is a cornerstone of civil society.
